

Huntington High School
Principal Brenden Cusack
Remarks at 64th National Honor Society Induction

Good evening, it is my pleasure to welcome our inductees and their families this evening for this momentous occasion. The National Honor Society dates back to 1921. The qualities of scholarship, character, leadership and service are all attributes we clearly still value today.

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all of our students who are being inducted into the National Honor Society this evening. I thank you because you are our true ambassadors. Your academic effort, your stellar character, your dedication to service and your outstanding leadership are all shining examples of what Huntington High School strives to represent. Students like you make our institution stand out.

This evening, you will join the ranks of those who have gone on to do great things in their respective fields. The roster of National Honor Society inductees includes Presidents, Senators, authors and athletes, surgeons, scientists, musicians, astronauts and actors, among many others. It is likely that these individuals began their trajectory of success early on, just as you are doing now. I have great confidence that you, too, will go on to do amazing things beyond high school and in so doing you will continue to make us all very proud.

I wish you my sincerest congratulations on receiving such a distinguished honor this evening. Thank you.
