Members of the Grass Roots Environmental Education, a science-based, non-profit, environmental health organization, visited STEM and met with the three sixth grade classes. The program they presented was "Conserve and Protect Our Water." Students learned about local ground and surface water resources and basic hydrogeology. Students were made aware of how pollutants such as pesticides, dry cleaning solvents, cesspool waste, etc. can enter our water system, contaminating it. Students also learned how to protect our water and were encouraged to come up with their own ideas for conserving our water supply.
