Director's Notes

Love, loss, memories — Kodachrome — snapshots of our lives in black and white or color. As we are invited to observe the lives of the residents of Colchester, Connecticut, do their lives begin to blur and do we begin to see our own lives in their trials and tribulations? Lost loves, lost lives, fading memories — does the play ask us to reflect upon our own lives after seeing what these characters have been through and the decisions they have made? I have often said, "No one is truly gone for they live on in our memories." As we look through faded photographs, get a whiff of a favorite cologne, or leave a flower for someone, do we keep them with us and secure their legacy for future generations?
